~~to rule~~ ~~Giving~~ a country is a difficult task. In order to change it significantly, a whole team of talented politicians is usually required. However, an outstanding person can have an enormous impact on the development of the ~~country~~^{government}. Winston Churchill and Alfred the Great are great decent examples.

There are some similarities these politicians share. Firstly, both of them were courageous enough to take part in disastrous wars with advanced countries, such as Denmark or Germany. Also, Alfred and Winston were surprisingly charming. They could awaken the sense of morality in people. Besides, they adored culture and literature.

However, peculiar differences can be noticed between the historical figures. Churchill, unlike Alfred, had plenty of opponents within the country, it took him longer to access the UK's military forces. In addition, Alfred the Great didn't travel ~~at all~~, while Winston had an experience of being in various foreign countries.

In conclusion, Churchill's impact is more significant. He developed England's military forces and gained people's trust in the age of skepticism. Although, both Alfred and Winston are outstanding leaders.
