145.Задача 2.

1. In the painting described in the listening task we can see two people standing in their home, holding hands, while in Holbein's work we see two young men: the French Ambassador and his friend-Bishop of Lavaur.
2. Holbein portrays the young men standing against a background full of books, scientific and astrological tools, and in the picture from the listening task there is a couple and a small mirror that reflects the artist himself painting this work.
3. Both paintings are utterly realistic and both boast a variety of beautifully depicted details such as clothing, ^{however} Holbein's picture is painted in a more respectful manner, compared to the more emotional and personal painting from the listening task.
4. Holbein's double portrait has quite a big amount of symbols and details that make it more complex than ~~one~~ it appears from the first sight, which is also the case with the painting from the listening task that might even seem like a marriage contract.
5. Regarding the overall message of these two paintings, the one that depicts a couple allows the people looking at the picture to feel a part of it, owing to the mirror, whereas Holbein tries to put the wealth and the youth of those men into the perspective of inevitable death by painting a distorted skull.

The artwork on the left ~~shows~~ a boy catching ashes with his tongue. In the picture on the right we see an ironical Hillary Clinton presidential campaign poster. Both artworks touch upon serious social topics. The American right wing likes to mock Hillary Clinton's left-leaning views. This is the reason it says "United Socialist States of America." However, this artwork could not be created by Banksy as it is not in his famous stencil fashion. What could be Banksy's artwork, is the picture on the left. It is a stencil graffiti that is both witty and sad as it symbolises a poor and unhappy childhood with the boy catching ashes from the burning trashcan instead of snowflakes, like most children do.

Forgiveness is a very important theme, quite philosophical in a way. This topic has always been relevant as forgiveness is a part of our lives. That is the reason why so many literary works touch upon this theme. For example, in ~~the~~ the classic American novel "To Kill a Mockingbird," written by Harper Lee, two children of a lawyer — Scout and Jem are bullied at school because their father ~~were~~ is defending an unjustly accused black man. The novel was written and published in the ~~mid~~ 1960s — during the emergence of the civil rights movement. The other book is a story by the famous Russian writer A.I. Kuprin. The story is called "~~the~~" "Grandmother's bracelet". It revolves around a noble woman that keeps receiving love letters from an anonymous man. It is important to take into consideration that the story was written before the ~~the~~ Russian Revolution, during the times when ~~being~~ being a noblewoman was still relevant.

Чистовик

In my opinion, it is utterly important to be able to forgive people. Forgiving someone frees ~~off~~ one of the burdens of hate. If one does not get rid of it, it will make their life unbearable.
