Alfred the Great and Winston Churchill had an ~~extensive~~ extensive influence on the United Kingdom. Both of them dedicated their lives to this country and were fairly enough honoured for it.

In my opinion, ~~they~~ there are more similarities than differences between them. Firstly, they both were considered ones of the greatest statesmen in the English history. Secondly, Alfred the Great and Winston Churchill were valiant soldiers, who earned their popularity and trust among the English people for courage shown during warfare. Finally, both of the politicians were skillful in writing and kept some king of records of the English history.

However, there are still some differences between them. Even though both of them ruled the country, Alfred the Great was a high-born descendant of the lawful King of that time and Winston Churchill happened to be a simple journalist.

As for me, I can't decide whose impact was more significant for the United Kingdom, because both statesmen did a lot to support and advance the country.
