A. 1. FALSE. Only Alexandr was chosen to be the ruler of his country. Edward, on the other hand, inherited his royal title from his father.

2. FALSE. Edward conquered Wales and tried to do the same with Scotland, And Alexandr won a battle against the powerful Swedes, which is proof of the two men's aptitude when it comes to the military.

3. TRUE. Edward's wife was Queen Eleanor, and Alexandr was married to the Princess of Polotsk.

4. TRUE. Edward had to learn to deal with his anger.

5. FALSE. Alexandr seemed to love ruling over Russia so much, that he battled his way back to the throne to reinstall his son as prince after Vasily being banished.

6. TRUE. Edward was know to be intolerant of any opposition, while Alexandr was able to make compromises and collaborate.

7. FALSE. Edward strengthened the power of the King and the Parliament, weakening the nobles' influence. Alexandr also introduced changes to how the government operated.

8. TRUE. They both made significant changes to their respective countries' legal systems.

B. Every noble had gathered at the palace to witness the magnificent wedding of the King's youngest son, which was to take place that evening. They ate, drank, and danced, blissfully unaware of a man watching them. It was the elder one of the royal sons. This was supposed to be his wedding, which would have allowed him to inherit the throne and untold riches, however the foreign princess had her eyes on a different

BOOK 2. BAPUAHT 5.

The Interviewer: Antal Szerb is a name known to mystery enthusiasts all over the world. Tell me, Mr. Szerb, how does it feel to be one of the faces ████ representing your country's literature in the international community?

A. Szerb: Well, Hungary has seen a number of genius authors throughout the centuries, so it is an honour to be thought of as a writer of the same significance as them, especially since I haven't dedicated my whole life to the art of writing...

The Interviewer: Right! You are a scientist as well, am I correct?

A. Szerb: Exactly. A historian and philologist, to ██ be specific. I only started writing original ██████ stories because I was inspired by the wonders of my profession and wanted to share them with the wider world. With a touch of irony and humour, of course.

The Interviewer: Speaking of science, what ██████ opinions, if any, do you have way it ████ has evolved since your era?

A. Szerb: Ah, yes, it has changed quite a bit since my death. Actually, I suppose I wouldn't have died that early, had the science been better back in my days... Anyway, I'm certainly glad that they aren't trying to create a genetically superior race by putting all of the Jewish people in concentration camps anymore. That cost me my life and the world a few more mildly funny novels. Oh, the 40's were awful! I should mention, [redacted] though, that there are some flaws in the direction [redacted] science seems to be heading [redacted] in. Technology is developing at a pace that the "modern man" cannot keep up with. You are becoming more isolated because of the [redacted] fruits of science, its wondrous creations. It's also disappointing to see history, linguistics, philology, and philosophy being considered as lesser than fields like physics and chemistry. There can be no charm in the world built on equations, [redacted] haven't you thought of that?

The Interviewer: Yes, you are right, Mr. Szerb. It does seem that we give priority to some types of research, while dismissing others. Isn't it one of the themes of "The Pendragon Legend"?

A. Szerb: Correct. But the problem has only worsened since then. I truly hope that humanity continues its progress while incorporating the valuable data of those "other" [redacted] sciences, which can teach people wisdom and morality.

The Interviewer: I can only agree. We are doomed to [redacted] repeat the mistakes of our fathers if we don't learn their history, aren't we? Now, moving [redacted] on to the next topic of our discussion...
