1. Shakespeare did that in order to master his skills, as the first period was spent in apprenticeship.
2. He wrote plays in genres that were popular at the time. For example, the "tragedy of blood". He imitated Roman comedy and tragedy as well.
3. He didn't like working in that style as much as he loved writing romantic comedy, therefore he quit trying to do what he disliked.
4. The 3rd period is characterized by significant pessimism and bitterness. It's much more depressing than any other period of his.
5. The last period he used a new form of writing - the tragicomedy. That brought new atmosphere to his texts.

Hey there, mom.

Sending you a letter from the camp... How have you been?
Haven't seen you in quite a while.

My life's pretty calm here. In the daytime we usually just wander around in the forest or near the mountains with a couple of new acquaintances live met here. Then the evening comes and the entire camp gathers next to a huge fire to share what happened that day. Somebody always plays the guitar. I rarely talk and mostly prefer to sit by myself in a warm corner and work on my novel. I've made some good progress during my stay here.

This place is cool. As you already know, I love nature; it's honestly great for my mental health. The mountains are huge, and the camp looks like it's being protected by them. It's always quiet in the forest; sometimes I wish I could stay there forever. The people are surprisingly nice and friendly here. Haven't yet encountered a single hostile individual, thankfully. I was even able to make friends. Nothing special happens here, time just flows very smoothly day by day. Being here feels like therapy.

Yesterday my new friend Jake and I went to the other side of the river, and while crossing it, we saw some fish. It may or may not have been salmon. We stayed there, discovering new parts of the forest, until the sun had set. When we returned to the camp it was already so dark all around that the only things we could see were stars in the sky. Thousands, if not millions, sparkles in the darkness. Unbelievably beautiful, stunning. It struck me to the core with understanding of our insignificance before the face of the universe. Not to be nihilistic, I still like being a human, but everyone should sometimes allow themselves to get some of the mundane responsibilities off their shoulders. I think you should try it too.

I'm thinking of going stargazing again tomorrow. Maybe I'll go alone this time, I don't like being interrupted by people. I can also invite the sad girl of our group, Mel. She looks so sad all of the time... I wonder what's on her mind. Anyways, the next day has yet to come. →

I've got time to think. Plenty of it.

I don't miss home all that much. It was noisy and I felt like I was slowly going insane, drowning in derealization and anxiety. Things are much better now. Surely, I really miss Thyme. Tell him he's a good boy and please don't forget to take him out for a walk. Dogs need that to stay healthy.

I'm excited for your arrival, honestly. Didn't think you'd come after what had happened... I won't ask for much, but if you can, please bring me a new notebook to write in, a couple black pens and a loaf of toast bread. I think I can cut it in cubes, then fry it in the fire.

I miss you so much. See you soon, hopefully.

Love you,

R.S.

Hey there, mom!
 Writing to you from the camp. • How have you been?
 Haven't seen you in quite a while.

My life's quite calm here. In the daytime we ~~are~~ usually just wandering around in the forest and next to the mountains with a couple new acquaintances I've met here. Then the evening comes, and the entire camp gathers ~~around~~ ^{next to} a huge fire to share what happened that day. Somebody always plays the guitar. I rarely talk and mostly prefer to sit by the fire in a warm place and work on my novel. I've made some great progress in these two weeks during my stay here.

This place is cool. As you already know, I love nature, it's good for my mental health honestly.
 The mountains are huge and ~~give the impression of~~ being protected by them. It's always quiet in the forest; sometimes I wish I could stay there forever. The people are surprisingly nice and friendly here. Haven't yet encountered a hostile individual, thankfully.
 Nothing special happens, time just flows by really smoothly.

Yesterday ~~me and~~ my new friend Jake and I went to the other side of the river, and while crossing it, we saw some fish. I think it was salmon.
 We stayed there, discovering new places of the forest, until the sun had set. When we returned back to the camp it already was so dark all around, that the only thing we could see were the stars in the sky. Stunning. Unbelievable. Truly makes you understand how little does a human life matter before the face of the universe.

~~Tomorrow~~ I'm thinking of going stargazing again tomorrow. Maybe I'll go alone, I don't like being interrupted by people. I can also invite Mel, she's very quiet lately. I wonder, what's on her mind? Anyway, the next day has yet to come. I've got time to think.
 Plenty of it.

I don't miss home all that much. It was noisy and I felt like slowly going insane, draw-

I'm excited for your arrival, really. Didn't think you'd come after what happened. I won't stones at him.

I HAVE NO IDEA WHAT SCONES ARE.
THEY MIGHT BE ANYTHING. THEY MIGHT BE FILLED WITH GASOLINE AND METHAMPHETAMINE AND I WOULD NOT AT ALL BE SURPRISED
IF I RECEIVED THIS INFORMATION.
SORRY.
