1. First of all, a large number of physical and cognitive features of the body reach their zenith during the period of adolescence. Secondly, teenagers' creativity improves significantly once they reach this life period, which enables them to come up with innovative ideas as well as intricate plans. Lastly, ~~adolescents~~ are less inclined to be affected by negative events than other people, which is also a considerable advantage. 2
2. Adolescents didn't have the chance to fall back on their parents' savings or incomes, as they were miniscule. Teens had no choice but to assist their parents and ~~contribute~~ help them make ends meet. 2
3. Text 1 and Text 2 are devoted to different aspects of adolescence. ~~It~~ while the first text concentrates primarily on the advantages of the teenage years, the topic of the second text is related to the life of adolescents in 1500s, which is drastically different. 2
4. Text 1 states that adolescence is the best life period in terms of the biological ~~condition~~ ^{condition}. Personally, I agree with this claim completely, as humans' bodies do indeed flourish during those years. 2
5. Since education policies are rather flexible nowadays, teenagers can combine school and work, which provides them with an opportunity to become independent without sacrificing the education. 2

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am writing to express my opinion on the article, ^{dedicated to reducing the number of airplane flights, which} I read in the national newspaper, and ^{provide personal comments.} The issue of global warming, ^{caused partially by the plane emissions} ~~is highly concerning~~, is highly concerning. Personally, I support the claim that people are not doing enough to tackle it.

One flight can emit as much CO₂ as a person ~~withing~~ within a year. Therefore, the impact it has on the environment is enormous. Yet it is worth taking into account that some people do not take planes at all. Despite that, they will be equally affected by the climate change as people who fly on a regular basis, which is completely unfair.

Considering the amount of CO₂ released by the planes daily, it is not surprising that the consequences of this phenomenon are already visible. Natural processes are being disrupted and the frequency of floodings has increased drastically.

Despite the gloomy perspective, there are ways to solve the problem. First of all, the awareness of the issue has to be spread. This will inevitably entail a reduction in the number of flights taken by people, since currently ^{most} humans simply are not familiar with the seriousness of the impact of plane emissions. Secondly, people need to be presented with alternative ways of travelling, which are less harmful for the environment.

In conclusion, the way in which planes contribute to global warming is disturbing. However, it is still possible to avert the problem if the action is taken urgently and unanimously by all human beings.

Yours faithfully,
Jane Blake
