Roman Empire had caused a great impact on Great Britain's development. Due to its invasion, the Romans' way of life affected the way British lived. For example, people started to wear the same clothes the Romans did, go to theatres and speak, read and write in Latin. We can still find remains of Roman architecture in Britain. Moreover, most British became christian, just like the Romans were.

Great Barrier Reef must be conserved for several reasons - aside from it being an extremely beautiful site, it's a home for numerous unique species that'd become extinct if it was destroyed.

Yellowstone National Park is truly unique because of its awe-inspiring sites and its diverse wildlife, and that uniqueness must be conserved at all costs.

Sydney Opera house is simply outstanding - it would be safe to call it revolutionary in architectural sense, so conserving it means conserving history.

Historic District of Old Québec is the only North American city to have preserved its ramparts, so we ought to make sure it remains as it is.

Palace of Westminster and Westminster Abbey has a great historic significance considering the events that happened there, so conserving it is important in cultural and historical senses.

Museums are an essential part of today's culture. People enjoy visiting museums because, although it may be considered an entertainment, they can learn a lot about history. It may be one's native country's history or world history in general - it's important to know both because it helps to create a bigger picture and know about how different cultures affected each other. The countries weren't developing separately, after all.

Museums can help with making children learn to love history. Such programms such as "Awesome Greece" may be enjoyable for kids and teens. I find this programm great because of how diverse the activities are - every child will find something interesting for them. In terms of organisation this programm is thoughtful as well - the time chosen for it is convinient as children are free from school during the weekends. Parents are present ~~throug~~ throughout the whole event so they can look after their children which is an important moment as well.

If I were to ~~ma~~ organize such an event, I'd make one called "The history of arts - from ancient to modern". As it's clear from its name, it will be about the history of arts and how the history itself affected culture. The programm itself will be an interactive lecture, so I think that people of age 15 and older would find it enjoyable. Held in the Hermitage, the event would last for two hours. During the lecture, people would be displayed different examples of art of a specific period of time. At the end of the event the visitors would be able to enjoy tea and ~~discuss~~ exchange their opinions. The event would be held on Saturday afternoon.

In conclusion, museums and events which are held there are very important because they can help expand one's knowledge in a very enjoyable way. More events like that should be held.

Great Barrier Reef ~~is very important~~ must be conserved for several reasons - aside from it being an extremely beautiful ~~sight~~^{side}, it's, ~~most importantly~~^{most importantly}, a home for numerous ~~unique~~^{unique} species that'd become extinct if the Reef was destroyed.

Yellowstone National Park is truly unique because of its awe-inspiring sites and its diverse wildlife, and ~~destroying it would be~~ its uniqueness ~~should~~^{must} be conserved at all costs.

Sydney opera house is simply outstanding - it would be safe to call it revolutionary in architectural sense considering its design, so conserving it means conserving history.

5. In today's world, Museums are an essential ~~cultural~~ part ~~of~~^{of today's culture} ~~of~~^{of} ~~life~~. People enjoy visiting museums because, although it may be considered an entertainment, they can learn a lot about history. It can be both history of one's native country or ~~international~~^{world history} in general - it's important to know both because it helps to ~~get~~^{create} a bigger picture. ~~Countries were~~ Throughout the history different countries affected each other's cultures, after all.

Museums can help children learn to love history. Such programmes as "Awesome Greece" ~~are~~ may be enjoyable for kids and teens - it has lots of different activities that are fun ~~to~~ do, and any child will find something interesting for them. More active kids may enjoy dancing whereas more creative ones would probably like the crafts or the drawing part.

1 The other good thing aside from diversity of activities here is time. In my opinion, it is good that the ^{event} ~~programme~~ is held during the weekend when kids don't have school. Parents are present during the event and they can look after their children, which is very important is well. So, in terms of organisation, the programme is convenient.

1 If I were to organize such an event, I'd make one about the history of arts. "The history of arts - from ancient to modern", held in Tretyakovskaya Gallery is a programme for teenagers and young adults where they'd be able to learn about how different kinds of art developed throughout the history and how history itself affected culture. The programme includes registration, i ~~is~~
