The Roman Empire influenced the development of the British Islands a lot, as for about four hundred years they have lost their independence to the Romans. That led to some changes in the way the Britons lived. They started to dress as Romans, the Romans, to attend theatres just like them, they also became christians and learned how to read and write in Latin.

Museums are an essential part of modern world's culture. They keep the experience and history of people that lived thousands of years before ago, letting us to learn from their mistakes and to success.

It is vital to get acknowledged with world's culture, as it is not enough to know the museums of your country only, because in the history of humanity every country and nation played a huge role, importance of which we can not deny.

Though the "Awesome Greece" event is a wonderful example of how people to make people more interested in visiting museums. Though it is said to be for 8-14-year-olds, it would also be suitable for older teenagers (from 15 to 18 year-olds). The activities such as crafts and drawing might be even more interesting for them, as they rarely have a chance to show off their art skills or to even find out that they are talented in that field. Dancing, as well, might be useful for teenagers, who tend to spend the most of the day seated. After all, Greek myths and legends are universal in terms of the audience that would like to listen to them.

Organisation is also well thought of. Registration will make it ~~no~~ easier to control and manage the process of choosing a sleeping spot, and group leaders will help to sort out all of the problems that the visitors might have throughout the night.

If I was to make a programm for a similar event, I would suggest for it to take place at the Moscow history Museum, as Moscow is one of the most visited Russian cities, so there are always a lot of tourists, for whom the event will be held. The theme of the event would be the history and culture of Russia, as they are one of the richest in the world, so the name of the event might be "The night of the Russian history", so it could outline its theme.

The visitors of the event should have a craft activity, where they would ~~make~~ ^{paint} a ~~part~~ ^{colour} traditional Russian toy - matreshka and also a cooking time, where they bake some Russian pies with meat. As long as songs are a great part of Russian culture, visitor should also try to learn some Russian traditional songs and sing them out loud together. After that, they will have a sleep over.

To help help visitors during the event, there should be group leaders. ~~who~~ They should know English or some other languages, to be able to communicate with ~~for~~ tourists, that ~~don't~~ do not speak Russian.

All things considered, there should be more of such events to keep people interested in history and culture of their and other countries.
