Though, the presented kind of activity isn't quite right for teenagers, as teens are much less interested in "childish" activities. To add to this, such "sleepover" activities aren't very comfortable schedule-wise. It is much easier to fit things as such in your schedule ~~in the~~ during the day, rather than night.

Although, such an activity would be a good idea for a museum, such as the Victory Museum in Saratov. Children could get acquainted with the history of our country, which is good, of course. It could be themed after aviation aviation, because ^{the} Saratov region is known for the "Night Witches" bomber division, which consisted of only women. It could be named as, "A Flight to the Past". Obviously, it'd take place in the Saratov Victory Museum, and it would be for ages 8-13. It could include story-telling about Russia's famous pilots of the Great Patriotic War, making sketches of the ~~planes~~ warplanes at the museum, and ~~making~~ ~~even~~ ~~more~~ making cardboard planes. The children would have a little break to eat and breakfast; the sleepover would start at about 19.30, after everyone checked in. Each activity would take around an hour. After the activities are over (and children had breakfast) everyone'd go to the souvenir shop and then would collect their bags to go. Each ticket (per parent) would cost 15 pounds, ~~child~~ every child would have to be with a parent. The sleepover would be on 7-8th of May, right before the Victory Day. Tickets could be bought online at the museum's shop website.

Britain was ~~affected~~ ^{affected} greatly by the Romans. Britons wore Roman clothes, could speak Latin, just like the Romans, and Britons started to go to theatres, again, just like the Romans. They also went to baths, like Romans. This all was probably because ~~the~~ Most of Britain was conquered by the Roman Empire. Britons became Christian, too, because of the Roman influence.
