Listening.

1. Both aunts are strict, but the extract one is simply tired, while "The Lumber Room" one is arrogant and deceitful; the former one gasps when the stranger manages to entertain the children, while the latter simply grounds the child.

The Children in "The Story-Teller" are calmly enjoying the story, while "The Lumber Room" child is unruly and devious: Children in the former story ask questions and listen; in the latter, the protagonist disobeys and tricks his aunt.

Reading

1 B - "Leif", "Viking" mean that the story is Norse

3 F - "Everyone stares at Joe" means that he has a disability, and everyone cheering for him allows the story to challenge the idea of disability as automatically "inspirational".

4 E - The book is about the Persian invasion of Greece, so it suits for military history fans.

5 A - Only a comic can be "addictive".

6 D - "Spirits" correlate to the "glowing" nature of the book, finds the courage - bravery, fears talking to other people - loneliness.

Cultural Competence

The speech was probably delivered by A. Lincoln so he couldn't have advocates for it. MLK was born after the Abolition of Slavery, so he couldn't have been a labourer at 39, so he couldn't have been a labourer at 14 years ago (at the ^{maximum} age of 14). The speech mentions "Southern men", however MLK advocated against racism as a whole, and he wouldn't specify which white man he's upset with.

Introduction

Preserving our history has always been an important task for humanity, and spreading it to the masses is a part of the process. Museums offer us a great opportunity to learn about the past while also providing entertainment. There exist many different museums around the world, and we must know about the most important ones and look up to them, since they may have some innovative ideas on how to make learning history interesting. For example, the British Museum will soon be hosting a Roman-themed sleepover, providing both education and entertainment for the students and think would be a very interesting way to spend the night.

Russian Museums

Museums as big as the British Museum exist in Russia (for example, the History Museum on the Red Square), and while they are quite similar in scope, their ways of educating the masses are much more conventional and traditional. Another difference is that they ~~do not~~ ^{do not} ~~do not~~ ^{do not} mostly focus on Russian history. However, it is so extensive that we need to learn much else - that is how rich our history is. Besides, we are all Russians, so we and my class mates would surely be interested in a similar event.

Glory of the art

While big Russian museums do not host similar activities, there also exist many small museums that pursue more innovative ways of education. For example, the Voronezh Kramskoy museum will soon be holding a similar event: "Glory of the Art". We will be shown many of Kramskoy's works and the stories behind them, as well as some other pictures, for example "From the Terrible and His son Ivan" by Repin. The event will last from 2 pm of March 12th to 11 am of March 13th and will only cost 750 roubles per visitor. With the target audience being high schoolers and the amount of visitors unlimited, it would be a great opportunity for our class to spend time with both purpose and pleasure!

 would be an unforgettable experience allowing us to get closer to our past and history. I propose making a reservation now, since we may not be able to get this ~~same~~ chance again.
